Stress-eat your way through this election

» @TheSecondCity

I'll never forget the night of 2016's first presidential debate: Trump looked resplendent in blue (and orange), Hillary ravished in red and I ate an entire block of yellow cheese.

It's impossible to get through these major campaign milestones without copious amounts of food to numb the pain of this political insanity. We've still got a few weeks left before Election Day, so if you're running out of stress-eating menu ideas, these should keep you satiated.

Cheetos Chicken Fries

In a United States that no longer makes sense, nothing tastes more like "the new normal" than Burger King's latest and greatest. They're orange, filled with a ton of nastiness and totally unqualified to be consumed by the public. Their actual advertising tagline is, "Chicken inside, dangerously cheesy outside."

Eat these when you can only be satiated by pretending to masticate Donald Trump in fast-food form.

A hot, steaming bowl of something made from organ meat

Tripe, chitterlings, foie gras, paté, haggis ... it doesn't matter. Make sure it's made from the entrails of a lesser beast, and eat it with gusto. Pretend you are Hillary Clinton, absorbing the energy of each soul you consume. Fill your belly with all that power, but be careful. It might make you a little drunk.

Don't forget a breath mint after—bad breath isn't ladylike.

An organic salad, drizzled with a vinaigrette made of metathesiophobia and tears

"Metathesiophobia" is the fear of change. Your tears are the wet things that emanate from your eyeballs every time you think about an Obama-less White House, and the bitterest pill to swallow is that Michelle and her love of vegetables are going to that great big garden in the sky—literally. I heard she's starting her own planet where people don't only eat salad to feel superior to those who ordered the burger with four fried eggs and a pint of Milk Duds on top.

Mexican food

None of us would be able to live without Mexican food. It makes life happier, hangs over more manageable and brunch a bit more savory. Without this cuisine, we'd all get sick really quickly of the same-old, same-old of mashed potatoes, cottage cheese, marshmallows, powdered donuts and the insides ONLY of Oreos.

Copious amounts of dairy products

You know who makes milk? Cows. Female cows. Without them, there would be no ice cream. No Greek yogurt to give us more excuses for more John Stamos commercials. No four-cheese pizza. Not even one-cheese pizza! It's about time the hard work and sacrifices that these ladies have made get their due. Equal hay for equal work, y'all.

I have no room in my life for intolerance, lactose or otherwise.

But whatever you do ...

You may not like the choices. You might want to order off the secret menu. But whatever you, do not eat your vote. Nothing tastes worse than apathy.

AMBER LOVESHE20 • Republican • Rogers Park

A volunteer for U.S. Sen. Mark Kirk's (R-Ill.) campaign, Amber Loveshe is passionate about the field work she does, which includes attending parades, festivals and events to pass out literature and stickers supporting him.

"I never want to take for granted the fact that our country allows us to elect our politicians. As a young Millennial, I believe it is extremely important to make your voice heard," Loveshe said. "By getting involved in campaigning, I feel that I am making a difference by putting my efforts into candidates that I feel best represent the needs of our state."

Loveshe got her start in electoral politics during her freshman year at Loyola University Chicago after seeing a flier advertising an internship on Bruce Rauner's gubernatorial campaign. Her interest in politics had grown since high school, and she believed volunteering was one of the best ways to stay informed for Election Day.

"After my first week of phone banking constituents, I realized how much I loved it and have been volunteering ever since," she said.

With hopes of one day becoming a campaign manager, Loveshe has used her volunteering experience to learn all she can about the work that goes into campaigning and how to overcome backlash for her political viewpoints and support.

"Living in a deep blue [largely Democratic] state like Illinois, a lot of people are usually shocked I volunteer for the Republican Party and Republican candidates," she said. "Many people my age do not hold conservative values, especially on college campuses like mine."

"I hold my head high and remember that I am working for someone who is willing to stand up for what's best for his constituents."

LINDSEY GOEDERS AND JOE CARLASARE33, 30 • Republican, Democrat • South Loop and Joliet, respectively

Participating in community affairs has always been important to Lindsey Goeders. So when she moved to Chicago five years ago, she wanted to feel part of the community, and one way she felt to do that was to get involved in local political organizations.

Goeders volunteered for Bruce Rauner's gubernatorial campaign in 2014 and for Jillian Bernas's campaign for election to the Schaumburg Township District Library Board in 2015.

She is presently managing several aspects of her boyfriend Joe Carlasare's campaign for local office, including fundraising, event planning, advertising, volunteer outreach and more. You'd think it would be a house divided, with Goeders being a Republican and Carlasare a Democrat, but Goeders says that couldn't be further from the truth.

"One of the things that brought us together was our interest in community involvement and politics," Goeders said. "Our political differences are one of the best things about us as a couple, in my opinion. It makes us strong and more understanding of others."

She serves as vice president of the Chicago Young Republicans, which boasts a membership of 200 people at any given time and often deploys members to volunteer on Republican Party campaigns that are already off and running.

"We get out and canvass, knock on doors, make phone calls, walk in parades, sit at booths at street fests, hand out literature at events and a slew of other things," Goeders said.

She said people are sometimes curious to ask her about what it's like being a Republican in Chicago, and she's open to having educated, well-informed discussions with people of opposite party affiliations.

"As you can imagine, I've met people from all over the political spectrum, and 99 percent of them are kind, welcoming, open-minded people who can appreciate the perspectives of people who may not share the same viewpoint," Goeders said. "And of course there are people who are resistant to accepting people who think different. But I think they are the ones missing out."

Goeders' motivation behind her activism is to invoke change by being active in local and state government and to help push forward policy that could benefit everyone, not just the people who share her party views.

"One of the biggest issues I have is with the partisan line that divides our leadership, from local and state to national levels. It's so counterproductive," she said. "Having many schools of thought represented at the table is a good thing, and the individuals at the table could benefit by working together."

"I don't think people are all that different—but the way we think is different. At the end of the day we all need and want the same things."

During the day, Carlasare works as an attorney, but on nights and weekends he works nonstop on his own campaign. He's a candidate for the Will County Board, hoping to represent a district that has approximately 50,000 people in it and nearly 27,000 registered voters.

"It's a very big district, and I'm just working my butt off trying to bring it home and win," Carlasare said.

With the help of family, friends and Goeders, Carlasare has been campaigning tirelessly, introducing himself to voters, fundraising, attending events and more.

"We've knocked on almost 5,000 doors," Carlasare said. "Whatever free time I have, it's not really free time because it's devoted to the campaign. It's been like that since October of last year when we were getting petitions."

The politics bug bit Carlasare more than 10 years ago when he interned for U.S. Sen. Dick Durbin (D-Ill.) while in college and then ended up going on to do volunteer campaign work for Hillary Clinton, U.S. House candidate Scott Harper, now-U.S. Rep. Bill Foster (D-Ill.) and other candidates. Carlasare said he dreamed of one day throwing his own hat in the ring, and now he has done just that.

"I like the phrase, 'Democracy is a verb.' You can't sit on the sidelines about things you're passionate about," Carlasare said. "We cannot function as a society unless we come to the understanding that you have to cast an informed vote, every two or four years, you have to do it—it's part of your civic responsibility. And I think it's my role to help spread that message."

Given the unusual circumstances of this presidential election, Carlasare said the best place to improve our nation is at the grassroots level.

"I think the Millennial generation is a transformative generation," Carlasare said. "I think it's continuing to revolutionize many different aspects of our society, and just about now, we're all getting old enough where we can start to revolutionize our political institutions, where we can make them responsive and fit in a 21st-century world."

DEREK BAGLEY28 • Democrat • Wicker Park

Derek Bagley's entrance into political life started around age 20, when he was a summer intern for the Better Government Association, a government watchdog agency. He gradually worked his way into different facets of politics, working for a Chicago alderman and then on political campaigns. Bagley worked as a finance director for several congressional races, a key role on any campaign. "Every day you sit down with your candidate for several hours and call through the people that you have amassed from different sources on these call lists," Bagley said. "When you call them, you tell them that you're running for office and ask for specific donations and targeted amounts."

After getting a master's in interdisciplinary studies from DePaul, Bagley altered his career path.

"I decided to go into nonprofit development work, which is inherently nonpolitical," Bagley said. "I research donors, I take individual contributions, I make sure that our monthly members are in order and organized, plan fundraisers and different outreach events."

"So the skill set is somewhat similar to that of a campaign finance director. Though, in nonprofit, it's a little less transactional than a political donor base because you're selling long-term ideas and not just a campaign and candidates."

Bagley is an advocate for young Chicagoans and works to inspire his generation to understand the power of its collective voice when it comes to democracy.

"We sort of disconnected ourselves from the government. And I think that Millennials fail to realize, and I see this a lot, is that we are the government," he said. "We can and should hold all of our elected officials accountable and realize that almost every facet of our lives are touched by local, state and national politics."

"If we vote together, we are one heck of a loud force to be reckoned with, and we need to connect the dots to that."

WE'RE OFFICIALLY LESS THAN A MONTH AWAY FROM ELECTION DAY. After last night's town hall head-to-head, we're about to enter our second cycle of post-debate coverage. So who do you turn to when you want someone to talk about the insanity you just witnessed? There are 10 late-night hosts, each at a different point on the political spectrum. Based on their coverage of the first debate, we broke down what to expect from each comedian going forward. @LCHVAL | LAURENCHVAL@REDEYECHICAGO.COM

Last Week Tonight with John Oliver

Given that John Oliver has devoted much of 2016 to trying to derail The Donald, it's no surprise that the first election segment of "Last Week Tonight" after the first debate ignored Clinton altogether and focused on Trump. Oliver cracked jokes about Trump's insistence during the debate that he has a great temperament, but the late-night host also had a week of post-debate Trump material. Namely, Oliver talked about Trump repeatedly mentioning unscientific online poll results and how he spent the week after the debate tearing down former Miss Universe Alicia Machado, culminating in a tweet storm in the middle of the night. "That is a candidate for president of the United States urging America to check out a sex tape. Just do me a favor: Look up into the sky right now. Higher. No, higher still. Do you see that? Way up there? Way up above the clouds. That's rock bottom. And we are currently way down here." That apocalyptic attitude has become Oliver's approach toward all election coverage.

Full Frontal with Samantha Bee

Bee bumped her show from Monday to Wednesday night to give the "Full Frontal" team time to digest the debate before ripping it apart. Throughout 2016, Bee hasn't been afraid to rage against Trump or chide Clinton for "tripping over her own [bleep]." Her post-debate episode mainly debunked and mocked much of Trump's performance while gently ribbing Clinton for being polished and generally uninspiring, but ultimately that didn't matter to Bee. She spent a segment building up Clinton rather than tearing down Trump: "Look, Hillary Clinton is never going to smile naturally enough for you. She's never going to be a thrilling speaker. ... She's never going to make you love her. In fact, she'd probably be offended if you tried; she has grandchildren for that. But we don't need her to be warm and vulnerable. It turns out what America really needs Hillary Clinton to be, she is. Namely, one of the only people in the whole goddamn country who's not afraid of a bully." Bee is among the most political of late-night hosts, but she also includes more feminist commentary in her show than her peers.

Real Time with Bill Maher

Given his platform is HBO, Maher is working with two things: disbelief and profanity. He opens his post-debate show with "Welcome to another week of, 'Yes, this is really happening.' " The host, who doesn't identify as Republican or Democrat but has previously called himself Libertarian, spent his segment railing on Trump's qualities that some might call un-presidential. He barely touched on Clinton, other than in Trump barbs such as, "Trump interrupted her 51 times. At one point she had to say, 'Mommy's talking.' " Because his show airs Friday night, he was also able to comment on Trump's tweets regarding Alicia Machado and took a sharp dosing jab at the GOP: "Republicans out there, thanks for this. You must be so [bleeping] proud that your candidate finally took a stance on something and it's no fat chicks."

The Daily Show with Trevor Noah

Plugging Noah behind Jon Stewart's desk in an election year and expecting the same kind of "Daily Show" has been a tough ask. Noah hasn't always been up to the task, but as 2016 wears on, he has adapted to the role. Indeed, like Stephen Colbert, Noah aired an episode live following the debate. Given that reality, Noah delved into what was actually said more deeply than other hosts who took a full day to get their material together. Noah spent time mocking and correcting Trump's mistakes during the debate, but that didn't mean Clinton was off-limits. When she confused shootings with murders regarding the effects of stop and frisk, Noah scolded her: "This is one of the things I don't understand. These are the small lies that allow false equivalency to exist ... By lying there, in a debate with Donald Trump, you gave him one thing where he was right." Noah's entire show is about politics, so it makes sense that he's political, but he does offer nuggets on both sides of the partisan line, despite how easy it is to mock Trump alone.

The Late Show with Stephen Colbert

Colbert aired his show live following the debate. He spent years playing a parody of a right-wing pundit on "The Colbert Report," giving him a unique voice in this election season, but he has been shy to lean into his background before now. His post-debate show had the classic Colbert charm and easy humor, without anything really pointed or mean. Even his monologue later in the week contained more gentle swipes like, "We're still trying to figure out who won Monday's presidential debate. Democrats said Hillary won while Republicans are still strong in their conviction that there are two more debates." However, a recent New York Times profile suggests that Colbert might be returning to his political roots and shaking off his instincts to play nice, like he did in his interview with Donald Trump in September 2015. "I've surrendered to my natural instincts, and to how I actually feel on a daily basis."

Late Night with Seth Meyers

As the man who hosted Weekend Update on "Saturday Night Live" for years, Seth Meyers is probably the most natural political jokester of this election season. Seriously, is there anything more giggle-inducing than that man grinning ear-to-ear during the beat of silence after a joke? "Late Night" aired two "Closer Look" segments about the debate—one in the immediate aftermath and one the following night. Meyers went in on Trump, but not in an angry or aggressive way. "I love how he leans into the mic like the weird cousin at the last podium on 'Family Feud,'" Meyers said of Trump's frequent interruptions. Not that Clinton was out of bounds. "Look at her!" he said of Clinton's now infamous shimmy. "That's how an aunt shimmies after she hears 'Single Ladies' at a wedding." Expect Meyers to be political in the coming months, but don't expect him to land any real punches.

Conan

As a late-night host, Conan O'Brien is kind of the equivalent of your friend's goofy dad. He's full of harmless jokes and silly gags, which are sometimes funny but never as funny as he thinks they are. His monologue after the first debate had two Trump jokes before he moved on to other things. The first was about the Republican candidate complaining about his microphone. "Apparently he was angry that everyone could hear him perfectly," O'Brien joked. He then stuck his own mic up his nose and began sniffing it—he did this for a while. To wrap things up, he commented on how often Trump talked over Clinton. "Fifty-one times he interrupted her. Or, as Melania Trump calls it, a quiet night." O'Brien doesn't shy away from poking at Trump, but his jokes are basically cursory.

Jimmy Kimmel Live!

Kimmel, known more for his clever sketches and segments than his commentary, is not a particularly political late-night host. Though he said, "The choice is pretty orange and white," he seemed more intent on mocking the general circus of this election than fact-checking or opining on either presidential candidate. This quote sums up his election approach: "I have an important message for those of you who've been posting your opinions about who won the debate last night on Facebook. Here's the thing: Anyone who already agreed with you will continue to agree with you, and anyone who didn't, won't. So next time, instead of writing up a long, passionate thing, take a little nap. You'll be glad you did."

The Late Late Show with James Corden

Maybe you're most familiar with Corden because of his "Carpool Karaoke" bit, but he wasn't going to be left out of the political talk entirely. He opened his show with jokes about the usual: Trump's sniffing, his mic being defective, Twitter and the squabbling reporters. None of his material was particularly original or political, but that's not why you watch his show.

The Tonight Show Starring Jimmy Fallon

Fallon is the class clown of late night, and as such, he tends to steer clear of politics. He was widely criticized for palling around with Trump a few weeks ago when he messed up the candidate's hair instead of delving into the issues. But the presidential debate was all anyone could talk about, so Fallon couldn't avoid the subject entirely. They played some fake mic checks from each candidate, mocking Hillary for her obviously choreographed zingers and Trump for his constant sniffing. Fallon wrapped up the topic by launching a few of his own "Your B-52 is so old ..." jokes to rib Trump. If you want someone who's going to talk politics as little as possible and keep it light, Fallon is your man.

2016 NL DIVISION SERIES

CUBS

CUBS VS. SAN FRANCISCO GIANTS

Game 1 of the NLDS AP

THERE'S ONLY ONE WAY TO SETTLE WHICH NLDS CITY TRULY SHINES

By Chris Sosa | REDEYE

Although Chicago's at the top of the list when it comes to cities everyone should visit, San Francisco is pretty spectacular as well.

We've got the lakefront, they've got the bay and the Pacific Ocean. We've got Garrett Popcorn, they've got Ghirardelli ice cream. We've got reigning Cy Young winner Jake Arrieta starting on Monday, they've got October powerhouse Madison Bumgarner.

How do we settle this once and for all (or at least for a few months)? We'll leave it up to a good old-fashioned RedEye faceoff.

@REDEYESPORTSCHI | CHSOSA@REDEYECHICAGO.COM

NON-BASEBALL PRO TEAMS

If you had to be a fan of a team right now ...

Warriors > Bulls (even with Dwyane Wade back in his hometown)

Bears > 49ers (just barely, as both their records stink right now)

Blackhawks > Sharks (not even close)

Winner: Chicago, 2-1

CELEBRITY FANS

Cubs: Bill Murray, Eddie Vedder, Nick

Offerman, Jake Johnson, Vince Vaughn, Hillary Clinton. We could go on.

Giants: Rob Schneider, Colin Hanks, Zooey Deschanel, Lil Wayne, Marisa Miller, James Hetfield, among others. A solid list, no doubt.

Winner: Really tough call, but the nod goes to the Cubs thanks to Bill Murray and his "I Ain't Afraid of No Goat" T-shirt. Classic.

HASHTAGS

Cubs: #FlyTheW

Giants: #BELIEVEN

Winner: Believe it or not, the Giants take this one despite the fact that it's based on coincidence; San Francisco has won the past three World Series in even-numbered years. We're suckers for wordplay.

WEATHER

Chicago: Good news: Summers are nice and warm. Bad news: Winters are brutally cold.

San Francisco: Good news: It usually stays above 40 in the winter. Bad news: It usually stays below 70 in the summer.

Winner: San Francisco. There's something about not needing six layers on your commute to work that sounds appealing with January approaching.

CURRENT TV CRED

Chicago: "Chicago Fire," "Chicago P.D.," "Chicago Med," "Shameless" and "Empire" are all, well, on fire right now.

San Francisco: Huh. "Fuller House" is about it at the moment, which isn't saying much.

Winner: The Windy City by a landslide.

As much as we loved "Full House," the sequel needs some serious work.

WATERFRONT TOURIST TRAP

Chicago: Navy Pier

San Francisco: The Embarcadero

Winner: Chicago. The views from the Centennial Wheel are stunning, and Chicago Shakespeare Theater productions are first rate.

SKYLINE JEWELS

Chicago: Willis Tower, John Hancock Building

San Francisco: Golden Gate Bridge

Winner: San Francisco. There's just something postcard-perfect about that bridge.

FINAL VERDICT

The Windy City takes this one over The City (bit of a pretentious nickname, BTW), 4-3. Hopefully for Cubs fans, this Giants series won't be as much of a nail-biter.

TAROT.COM

Libra Sept. 23–Oct. 22

This week, you can anticipate emotional fulfillment between you and your mate in the most unexpected way. Your bond will deepen as you explore the more unusual dynamics between you. The eccentricities of your connection keep the fire burning.

Scorpio Oct. 23–Nov. 21

A delicate matter regarding your relationship might lead to frustration. You're not getting what you want from your lover this week, which might inflame you. Try to take a step back before you say something you'll regret.

Sagittarius Nov. 22–Dec. 21

If you're dating someone, you might realize you've fallen in love with his or her unusual qualities, or you might hear unexpected (but fulfilling) news from your lover. If single, an out-of-character move on your part might lead to you meeting someone special.

Capricorn Dec. 22–Jan. 19

You and your partner will likely focus on domestic issues this week. If you're in the process of finalizing a move, there might be an unexpected twist to your plans. Fortunately, the two of you will be able to come up with solutions on the fly.

Aquarius Jan. 20–Feb. 18

Suddenly, what you thought you and your partner were in perfect agreement over seems to be a chaotic situation you're not sure how to resolve. Try to put off talking about it. Resolution isn't likely when opinions are so diverse and listening isn't a priority.

Pisces Feb. 19–March 20

Conversations with your partner about a joint financial matter might be tense this week. With this much difference of opinion, making a solid decision about anything isn't a good idea. Do what you can to put this matter on the shelf for now.

Aries March 21–April 19

You want that ideal and fair partnership, and if there ever was a time to make it work, this is it. On Sunday, though, you might feel emotionally tied to getting your way, at any price. Think before you react. Being in love doesn't mean losing your identity.

Taurus April 20–May 20

If possible, stay away from touchy subjects with your partner this week. If there is an unavoidable uncomfortable discussion you must have, prepare yourself for the fallout and recognize that after Tuesday, more tension and anger might be in the air.

Gemini May 21–June 20

Your love life will not be stable this week, but it doesn't have to be a train wreck. You and your lover may choose to move toward reinventing your relationship into something that makes each of you feel more alive.

Cancer June 21–July 22

It looks like you and your partner are about to engage in a heated argument about a domestic situation that you can't seem to agree on. Compromise is necessary, but it'll take time. Be patient and avoid saying something to your mate that you'll later regret.

Leo July 23–Aug. 22

It looks like you and your lover will have a difficult time compromising after Tuesday. A lack of patience for each other's perspective is likely. You may also crave more exciting mental stimulation from your mate and feel as if, for at least this week, it's lacking.

Virgo Aug. 23–Sept. 22

It appears that you're holding in some resentment toward your lover about finances. Instead of trying to bite your tongue, why not make a list or write a letter expressing what you're upset about? Don't show it to him or her this week, though—wait until next week.

TCA FILE

HOT DATE

NOVEMBER 18

That's when Bruno Mars' new album, "24K Magic," will be released, according to Rolling Stone, which means we've got about six weeks before a dozen or so more of his songs will forever become part of wedding reception playlists. It's been four years since Mars released "Unorthodox Jukebox," though since then he's appeared in the Super Bowl Halftime Show twice and been stuck in our heads with Mark Ronson's "Uptown Funk." The new album announcement came with the release of a song by the same name and its music video, which has already seen more than 15 million views on YouTube since being uploaded on Thursday. Mars is scheduled to perform on "Saturday Night Live" this week.

'Train' chugs to No. 1

"The Girl on the Train" rumbled past competitors this weekend to top the box office with $24.7 million, according to Variety. The mystery/thriller starring Emily Blunt blew past last week's No. 1, "Miss Peregrine's Home for Peculiar Children," which pulled in $15 million in its second week. "The Birth of a Nation" debuted at No. 6 with a weak $7.1 million. The film has been plagued by controversy surrounding a rape case against writer/director/star Nate Parker and co-story writer Jean Celestin from 17 years ago. Analysts also credited Hurricane Matthew with affecting ticket sales in the Southeast.

Chalk up another one

"Eternal Sunshine of the Spotless Mind" has joined the recent wave of movies being remade for the small screen, because originality has officially been erased from our minds. According to The Hollywood Reporter, the 2004 film starring Jim Carrey and Kate Winslet is being rebooted as a TV series with Zev Borow ("Forever," "Chuck") close to a deal to write the script, THR.com said.

THE DIGIT

$1B "Finding Dory" swam over the $1 billion mark at the global box office over the weekend, making it Pixar's second film ever to do so ("Toy Story 3" is the other) and Disney's 12th, according to Variety. Despite a few flops this year including "Alice Through the Looking Glass," Disney has found a ton of success at the box office, with "Captain America: Civil War," "Star Wars: The Force Awakens" and "Zootopia" all reaching the $1-billion milestone in 2016.

THE QUOTE

"I WOULD BE A GOOD SPY BECAUSE I REALLY LISTEN AND I'M SMALL SO I CAN HIDE IN LOTS OF PLACES."

—Isla Fisher, to Variety, about her chances pursuing a career in espionage. Fisher co-stars with Jon Hamm, Gal Gadot and Zach Galifianakis in the upcoming action-comedy "Keeping Up with the Joneses," about a suburban couple (Fisher and Galifianakis) who get caught up in an international spy plot when the Joneses (Gadot and Hamm) move in next door.

Leave it to Weaver

At New York Comic Con over the weekend, the stars of Netflix's "Marvel's The Defenders"—Charlie Cox (Daredevil), Krysten Ritter (Jessica Jones), Mike Colter (Luke Cage) and Finn Jones (Iron Fist)—introduced fans to the big baddie they'll be battling: Sigourney Weaver. And that's about all we know, as no other details about Weaver's character were divulged during the panel, EW reports, though judging by the crowd's reaction, fans are totally on board. As are we. "The Defenders" will be released sometime in 2017.
